A Health-Keeping Routine.

"Nature designed." writes an authority or health matters, "that the enormous amount of material exuded rom the akin should carried off and purified largely by the action of light and air. Our ciothing prevente with action ; it is in parts, as the clothing of the feet, almost air-tight, and is wholly impea-meable to light. That by Co end we are encased in an envelope of active utrefacm st depressing action upon the itin, and thence upon our physique in general, cannot be doubted." The health precautions he advise are: A sponge bath in the morning, with brisk triction before or after, a complete change of clothing before dinner, with washing of the feet, and friction with a flesh brush, and in warm weather a sponging of at night. The clothing removed should be hung up fully exposed to air and light, and, of course, two suits of underclothing will be in use. It may be added that iresh stockings daily are a luxury well worth paying for; that shoes should be alternated every day or two, and that the feet should not be encased in high leather or kid books a moment longer than must be.
